108	Poem by Allen Ginsberg - first publication, with original art by Soheyl
	Dahi Letterpress poem 10x6" and tipped into black paper folder. It reads:
	"Prophecy if I shall find
	What I miss. But never mind, The wish is all rhetorical.
	No one is wiser than the wind,
	The wind is its own oracle.
	Lost, lost, all lost.
	It was the wind that took away  My dusty thoughts and all that clay.
	What I lost is what I lack,
	In heavy dirt; and death someday,
	Like the wind, will blow it back,
	Lost, lost, all lost.  What is life, and what is death,
	And what is wind, but my own breath?
	My language goes with what has gone,
	But all dead things return to earth
	Weary of words and wasted worth, As I shall do when all is done,
	Lost, lost, all lost."
